3. There are few aspects of the life and writing of Hafiz that have not given rise, and especially from about 1930 to 1955 to vigorous scholarly dispute over matters of both interpretation and fact. The reverence in which he is held, not only in Persia but wildly throughout East and West.
4. The bibliography is very extensive, and only some of the principal editions or translations can be mentioned here (in general, it may be said that serious interest in Hafiz seems to have passed, after his death, to the Ottoman world and to India, Whence in strength to Persia only in the 20s and 30s of the present century).
